An overview of the graphs' analysis:

Enrollment numbers have been rising steadily, and the disparity between male and female in general and commerce enrollments is getting less. Enrollments in science indicate significant progress toward gender equality, with equal involvement from men and women in recent years. Girls exhibit great commitment in extracurricular activities, as seen by their consistent participation in NSS and notably increased involvement in cultural events. Girls' involvement in sports has also increased, indicating their rising interest in the sport. The gender difference persists despite a rise in both male and female academics, according to faculty data.

A Few Potential Challenges:

Even with advancements, problems still exist. There is still a significant gender disparity in professors, and male enrollments continue to outpace female enrollments, particularly in Commerce. More inclusive hiring and retention procedures are needed to achieve actual gender balance. Although females are increasingly participating in extracurricular activities like as athletics, NSS, and cultural events, this trend has to be sustained and enhanced with continued support and encouragement. It is vital to address these problems in order to advance an inclusive and equitable learning environment.
